Dancing, Featured by Fine Music, at the Forest Theatre

The poetry of motion, supplemented by beautiful music, is one of the most charming arts one can witness. And it is a pleasure to observe that everywhere this art is growing in popular favor.

So short a time as five years ago, even in populous centers, there was some hesitancy about presenting an entire evening of interpretive dancing. But since then dancing and the symphony have made great progress.

Three years ago Miss Jeannette Hoagland and her company of Woodland Dancers gave the first dancing in Carmel. She repeated last year. And on next Saturday evening the third annual performance is to be given at the Forest Theatre.

A special feature this year will be the music this year. Frederick Preston Search, with the excellent Highlands Trio, has been practicing with the dancers, so that we may be assured of music adequate to the splendid dancing.

Tickets are now on sale at the Book Shop. Reserved seats are 75 cents, general admission 50 cents, children half price. War tax extra.

Mrs. E. R. Veblen, with the young musician, Henry Cowell, and Miss Evelyn Wells, came down for a brief visit here last week. Mrs. Veblen is a sister of Mrs. McCollom.

Sergeant James Carroll, just out of the regular army, is a guest of his brother, George Carroll, at Pebble Beach. The Sarge says the climate in Siberia is—well it don't compare with these parts.

Guy Rose and wife of Pasadena, who were here last summer, are again here. They have the Comins cottage, probably until September 1. Mr. Rose is director of the Stickney Memorial School of Art.

Tennis Racquets and Tennis balls at Carmel News Co., L. S. Stevin, Manager.

E. J. Sullivan, who recently purchased forty-two lots here, is now in San Diego putting through another property deal. He will be here in about weeks.

About every fifth person who comes to Carmel for a vacation carries a bundle of golf clubs. The links near Pebble Beach are but a short distance from here.

There has been a change in the personnel of the party of sisters sojourning here. They will continue to go and come from Fresno until August 13.

J. H. Underwood, Professor of Economics at the University of Montana, arrived here last week. He may remain here several months.

More Carmel Valley fruit is being sold here this summer than ever before. Formerly a much larger quantity was marketed elsewhere.

William B. Geiser and wife are again here from Sacramento. On Sunday last they went huckleberrying with the Seidenecks and the Overstreets, driving to their destination in a comfortable Velie. Mr. Geiser deals in San Joaquin County farm lands.

Miss Evelyn Shepard and B. MacCallum, who spent two months here at El Monte Verde, have returned to Berkeley.

The local public school will begin the first term of the 1919-1920 year on the second Monday of next month, with Miss Mary Powers and Miss Mai Guichard as teachers. Meantime the building and grounds will be put in shape.

The Carmel Sanitary Board will meet at the City Hall on Monday evening, July 28, as a Board of Equalization. If you think your assessment is too high, tell them about it.

The moving picture, taken in Carmel and vicinity, about a year ago, with Harold Lockwood and his company, is now being exhibited in California theatres. It is named "A Man of Honor."

A new boarder arrived at the Ben Leidig home last week. It's a boy, and he has been named Vernon Francis. The four Leidigs have eight children; Bob has the only girl.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Senor don Antonio de la Guerra, wealthy Spanish ranch owner on the American side of the Mexican border, is informed by his American attorney that a technical error has been found in his will. The senor signs a new document without reading it.

CHAPTER II—Teresa, only grandchild of the senor, finds evidence of a struggle in the library and her grandfather missing. The belief is that the senor has been carried across the border by Mexican rebels. Billy Stanway, Teresa's sweetheart, takes command of the situation and orders the servants and vaqueros to arm themselves.

CHAPTER III—Stanway, with twenty men, starts in pursuit of the rebels. They meet Eduardo Ramon Torre, kinsman of Teresa, who has been wounded, he claims, by the escaping rebels.

CHAPTER IV.

Word From the Insurrectos.

Moon paled, stars died, the east flushed to the coming of the sun before they turned back from a fruitless quest, riding again close together toward the north.

Stanway and Gaucho had kept upon the trail through the fields, the others spreading out to east and west as they rode that there might be no chance of missing the party they sought in the night.

But in an hour they had come into a country where all tracks were mingled with the hoof marks of cattle and vaqueros' ponies, and their trail was smothered and lost.

Shortly before midnight they had come upon three men, ragged, ugly-looking Mexicans, sleeping about a camp fire which was fast dying. The men knew nothing or professed at ignorance, Stanway could not tell which.

After that nothing, although they had pushed many miles into the Mexican country until they realized the utter uselessness of riding farther.

"We may as well go back, Gaucho," Stanway said at last. "They will want ransom, I suppose. When they speak we'll know what to do."

And reluctantly, his face black with the wrath upon him, Gaucho Morales called to his men to turn back.

The sunlight lay bright and warm upon the oranges and their blossoms when they rode back to the rancho.

Stanway threw himself from the saddle, a bit stiff from long hours of hard riding.

Then, walking slowly now, loath to greet Teresa de la Guerra with news of their failure, he came into the patio.

She was there waiting for him.

"Nothing," he blurted out. "We have found nothing."

"I know," she said quietly. She came toward him, putting out her hands. "You have been good to us, Senor Billy."

He laughed a bit awkwardly.

"I don't know how," he retorted. "I have done nothing. You have not been molested here?"

She hesitated. He saw a quick frown gather her brows. Then, speaking lightly, she replied, saying:

"No. But come; you must be hungry and tired out. Coffee is ready."

He went with her to the broad-open doors.

"Torre is here?" he asked, his eyes intent upon her face.

The frown came again, and was gone quickly. But he had seen it.

"He is here, yes. Asleep, I think. He was wounded. You know?"

"He is not badly hurt?"

Her tired eyes, into which sleep had not come during the long night, grew brightly contemptuous.

"It is only his beauty which is harmed," she said swiftly.

"Good morning, prima mia!" called a deep, laughing voice. "Ah, still with us, Senor Stanway?"

Torre, debonair in the dark, youthful beauty of him, greeted them at the doorway.

"Certainly Senor Stanway is still with us," said Teresa coolly. "He is my guest, my grandfather's friend, Senor Torre!"

Torre laughed and lifted his shoulders.

"Enter," he said with a graciousness which was in some strange way vaguely insulting; it was as though he were the master here, and because of his generosity not only Stanway but the girl as well were allowed upon the premises.

Now it was Teresa who flushed.

"Come, Senor Billy," she said quietly. "We are going to have coffee together."

For the fraction of a second the two men stood fronting each other, their level eyes filled with challenge, with a mistrust which was little less than hatred.

Then the Spaniard, bowing again, turned away, with a slight smile playing under the small, pointed mustache, and Stanway followed his hostess.

Pedro himself superintended the serving of the simple breakfast.

"Senorita," Stanway said at last, pushing back his chair, "I should like to go back to the drawing room. There might be something there to give us a hint that will help us."

"Si," she said, "I had thought of that. I looked last night carefully after you had gone."

"You found nothing?"

"Nothing that I could understand," she answered quietly, "Something I could not."

He looked up at her quickly, his eyes full of question.

"This," she answered, not waiting for him to speak.

She placed a folded paper before him. He glanced at it, frowned, looked again, and turned once more to her.

"It is his will. Dated last night. But why has he made a new one?"

"Read it," as quietly as before, though her eyes were brightening with some surge of emotion he could not guess.

He ran through it hastily, skimming the lines, eager for the gist of it. And when he had found it he leaped to his feet, his hands clenched, amazement and anger mingled in his eyes.

"It is a forgery!" he cried sharply.

"No," shaking her head. "It is his signature. And, look, to make certain I investigated. Pedro and Juana and Videl witnessed the signature. That is what brought Mr. Dempton last night."

"But," he muttered heavily, "the thing is impossible! Why, he has given everything, everything to Torre! And he hated Torre more than he pretended to hate an American!"

"Yet it is his will," she reminded him. "And he is gone. And Senor Torre is here."

"Already with the air of a master!" shouted Stanway. He was already half across the room, sheer wrath in his eyes now, the will crumpled in his hard hand.

"Wait!" the girl cried, running to him, her hand upon his arm as though she would hold him back. "What are you going to do?"

"To tell him that he is no less a fool than a thief," he retorted. "That he must explain his opportune presence here as well as the disappearance of De la Guerra."

"Again I appear to eavesdrop. Again I prove the adage that he who listens hears disappointing things of himself." It was Torre leaning indolently in the doorway.

"You are going to say, senor—"

Stanway flung the crumpled paper in front of him.

"Explain that!" he snapped. "You can't get away with a thing like this, Torre. Explain it!"

"When I have read it," replied Torre coolly, his small hand carelessly taking up the document. "Ah"—with what sounded like very genuine surprise in his tone—"it is De la Guerra's will!"

Teresa and Stanway watched him closely.

"It seems very clear," he said then, his eyes smiling. He folded the paper carefully and thrust it into his pocket. "Where is the need for explanation?"

"The will was made last night," said Stanway crisply. "The ink of the signatures was hardly dry when he disappeared. What is the connection of the two events, senor?"

"You ask riddles, senor." Torre shrugged his shoulders.

A servant in snowy white linen livery appeared in the dining room doorway.

"El Capitan Juarez to speak with the senorita," he announced.

Stanway started, swinging about, forgetting Torre for the instant.

"Of the rebel army?" he demanded.

"Si, senor! Of the insurrectos."

"I can guess his errand," remarked Torre indifferently. "He will no doubt wish to speak with me. Tell him, muchacho, that as the De la Guerra heir I shall speak with him—when I have finished my coffee. A little more sugar, Pedro."

Bonds Fail to Carry

97 Yes 61 No

The opponents of civic improvement achieved a glorious victory Tuesday.

However, the above vote shows the desire of a fair majority of Carmel citizens concerning Ocean Avenue.

Unfortunately a majority of 36 in a total vote of 156 is not sufficient to carry a bond proposition. It lacks eight of the required two-thirds vote.

Still, there is encouragement for friends of progress in the figures. Those opposed to the bonds polled nearly their maximum strength, while it is apparent from the total vote cast that only fifty per cent of those favoring the bonds voted.

To lack of organized effort on the part of the proponents of the bonds may be attributed the result.

An election tomorrow or six months from now would bring a different outcome.

Big Kids Have a Swell Party

By One of Them

ma Hooper guve a bunch of us kids a party t'other night at her house, an' ther sure wuz sum big doin's. It wus one of them nights of reel sport and a feller did't need no friend.

"Stuffy" Gribner and "Fat" Hilliard kinda run things an' they done pretty good. We playd musical chairs an' we all laffed when Mar. boke sat on the floor. "Dude" Swenger is a good speeler but "Elevator" Boke win the bee.

another funny thing wuz when Mab Hathaway an' Grace Morris an' safty razor Gilett trid to sit on a bottle an' light a candl. "Shin" Wilson put the donkey's tale where it auta be 'an he got a priz.

"Dug" Short and Mar-ie w.s ketched spoonin' in a corner, an' "Babe" C. vanriper made 'em quit. "Happyheart" Boke wuz always cryin' 'bout sumpin, specially when "Booky" Heron said she cud not have no more ice cream. Ailey Beer wuz whinin' 'cus they wuz no pianner, so Bonnie Hale sung for him. Kitty Overst got sick an Hel vanriper wuz the nurse. Gord Davis an' Hud Stroud wuz bashful and stayd out on the porch. Art Cyril had to go home erly becus he forgot to chop wood for brekfast. Onct or twice black Mandy Hopper cum near spankin' Tom Hooper, Dick Boke an' Jim Jr, but Ida Hilliard and Urs Hooper saved 'em. things wuz never quiet when Florence, Rosemary an' Lowell Hardy got a chanct to talk. The goodest kids at the party wuz Dorothy Morris an' "Slim" Brelin.
